Shooter lied in bid to obtain license

Kelley indicated no convictions, no AF discharge

By John Tedesco
STAFF WRITER

Devin Patrick Kelley, the gunman who killed 26 people in Sutherland Springs on Nov. 5, lied to the Texas Department of Public Safety earlier this year when he applied for a private security guard license and claimed that he had no criminal convictions and hadn't been discharged from the military. In his June application to be licensed in Texas as an unarmed security guard, Kelley answered "no" when asked whether he had ever been convicted of a felony; if he had been convicted of a Class A or Class B misdemeanor within the past five years; and whether he had been discharged from the military.

Kelley had actually received a "bad conduct" discharge from the Air Force in 2014 after he was convicted of assault charges in a domestic abuse case. A jury at Holloman AFB in Alamogordo, New Mexico, gave Kelley a 12-month sentence after he pleaded guilty to attacking his wife and baby stepson. The infant suffered a skull fracture in the attack, said retired Col. Don Christensen, a former head of Air Force prosecutors. Shooter continues on A4

Elections driving Latinos' hopes up

Recent wins add to 2017's successes

By Bill Lambrecht
WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — Latino success in Virginia and across the country in recent elections continued a run of historic victories in 2017 and left leaders confident of their strategy heading into midterm elections next year. But the leading role of minorities Nov. 7 rekindled a debate among Democrats about how to appeal to moderate voters and raised questions about whether the victories can be replicated next year in Texas, which is notorious for low turnout among Latinos. Even before Virginia, which elected Latinas to Latinos continues on A9

H-E-B eyes parking garage, bridge for employees over César Chávez

By Joshua Fechter

H-E-B is seeking permission from the city to build a six-story parking garage and employee bridge across César Chávez Boulevard to accommodate its expanding workforce at its headquarters downtown. The bridge would connect the garage, which would add 750 parking spots, to the supermarket chain's offices at the Arsenal complex on César Chávez, company spokeswoman Dya Campos said. The city's Historic Design and Review Commission is tentatively set to take up the proposal at its Dec. 6 meeting. The project is part of the company's $100 million master plan first unveiled in 2013, Campos said. Chief Operating Officer Craig Boyan told the San Antonio

A Border Patrol agent who died Sunday in West Texas was apparently attacked, and a second agent who also was attacked and injured has no memory of what happened, complicating an investigation, the president of the Border Patrol union said Monday. Federal officials have not said how Agent Rogelio Martinez died and warned that the investigation has not been completed. Martinez, 36, died from in-
